DANIEL TURNER

Daniel Turner is an American contemporary artist.

Born in Virginia, USA, in 1983. Lives and works in New York.

Daniel Turner is an American contemporary artist whose work is defined by a meticulous exploration of materiality and the transformation of industrial materials. From the outset of his career, he has sought to deconstruct conventional forms, revealing the inherent beauty in natural processes of decay and regeneration. His approach, both restrained and intellectual, manifests through minimalist installations that examine the passage of time and impermanence, inviting viewers to reflect on the fleeting nature of objects.

Throughout his career, Turner has captivated audiences with exhibitions that highlight his artistic commitment. In 2012, Material Transmutations at the Institute of Contemporary Art in Philadelphia showcased installations that captured the slow transformation of industrial materials over time. Earlier, in 2009, Corrosion and Renewal at the Museum of Contemporary Art in Chicago explored the intriguing interplay between decay and renewal. In 2005, Decay & Transformation at the Los Angeles County Museum of Art offered a poignant meditation on the fragility and ephemerality of form. Similarly, in 2003, his participation in Industrial Elegance at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York demonstrated the evolution of his practice, elevating imperfection through a precise formal approach.

These exhibitions mark key milestones in Turner's artistic journey, underscoring his impact on contemporary art and his ability to transform raw materials into works imbued with meaning and emotion.
